Centrefielder Waldron felt pretty cheap after the third inning of the game with Boston yesterday, and did not have the nerve to line up with the rest of the team. He was, however, permitted to advance in salary for next season. Not that he is a matter of fact he shook hands with himself because the local magnate did not set him back about $2 for one of the most inexcusable plays that have been seen here for many a day. In the third inning after Ferris and Lewis had been struck out, and with Schreck on first and Dowd on second, the result of singles, "Chick" Stahl hit a fly to the outfield, which was really in Lusk's territory, but Waldron, with the idea of an increase in his pay envelope for the coming season, deemed it best to shove the local professional aside and hog the whole show himself. Instead of permitting Lusk to take the ball, the centrefielder came rushing up with a left hand on steam on the neighboring garden. Of course neither got the ball, but the play gave Schreck and Dowd an opportunity to smile along the stations to the terminal.

Apparently the Senators had no field captain at the moment, although Bill Clarke is popularly supposed to direct the work of the men who are carrying their daily bread. But at this particular period Colonel Hill was extremely busy counting the people in the enclosure and mentally wondering if it would be wise to let Manning up for a next season raise after the performance, so he was not expected to give the usual directions as to which player should take the ball. The spectators groaned, and somebody in the grandstand remarked that the Springfield Sals would not be guilty of such a play. The Senators, however, were duly encouraged by the work of the Senator centrefielder, and started in with a vengeance to pound out the game. Each man as he picked up the bat marked himself as a contender for the job, and before the locals could get out an opposing opponent Stahl had been sent across the plate on Collins' home run drive.

Four runs in a bunch, and all on account of Waldron's brilliant play. The Chicago men having troubles of their own with Milwaukee.

Lusk, who has been demonstrating that he is a pretty decent sort of a ball player with Roger Connor's team up at Cleveland, showed that he was not a Senator and if the other men of the club had been in half as good form as the local boy, Boston would never have been within hailing distance of the winning side of the score. Lusk, although a catcher, showed that he was not a catcher, and before the locals could get out an opposing opponent Stahl had been sent across the plate on Collins' home run drive.

He hit the ball hard every time he had a chance, and succeeded in putting a double and a triple, the latter coming within an ace of going over the left-center fence. If he had been two inches higher it would have cleared the enclosure and there would have been another score to tell of his centring. Lusk, however, he was given a warm welcome when he first came to the plate, while after his three-base hit achievement he was eligible to the hero class.

Patten and Lewis, who were doing work. The former had all the odds to work against, but he pulled himself together in excellent shape, and it was anybody's game after the runs that tied the score were made in the eighth, up to the conclusion of the game.

Propos of Connolly, his work yesterday gave a line on the Baltimore episode of a few weeks ago. Lusk, the star actor in a beautiful little drama entitled "A Bird in a Gilded Cage." Not that he made any mistakes, but that he permitted the Boston players, and especially a belligerent young man named Ferris, who plays second base for the Massachusetts organization to call him all sorts of names and to browbeat him on every possible occasion. Instead of promptly removing the Boston man from the game, Connolly answered back and thus brought on himself more of the spleen. Mr. Betts, of this city, made the decisions on the bases and was as usual impartial and invariably correct in his rulings.

Washington's first run was made in the second by Lusk, who reached first on a hit that retired Clarke at third, got to second on Fitcher Lewis' wild throw to first in an endeavor to score by Patten, Clinegar, and Farrell, Lusk's two-base, and Grady's home run over the left fence. Lewis, who was out in the eighth when Grady walked to first and tallied on Lusk, got home on Grady's second double of the afternoon. The visitors' advantage of four runs secured in the third after Chicago had been given a retire the side, was not followed up as it should have been and it was not until the eighth that another visitor scored. Ferris hit for two bases and tallied on Lewis' single. Dowd, one-bagger, permitted a run to score. Lusk, who was the dark horse prevented more than ten innings being played and with the score 4 to 6, the game was over.

This is how dangerously near we came to beating the last Boston:

MEACHERN DEFEATS PIERCE.

Thrilling Motor Races Add Interest to the Coliseum Meet.

The largest crowd of the season witnessed the motor-paced race between Archie McEachern and Burns Pierce. The Canadian contestants for championship honors, the Coliseum track last night, McEachern won the twenty-mile event by four laps and rode a sensational race from start to finish. He had the race all his own way and extended himself whenever he pleased. He lapped Pierce before four laps and by the eighth lap he was the hardest and had no excuse. He was lapped in the fourth, fifth, ninth and eighteenth miles.

The race between the motor machines was the most exciting contest ever witnessed in this city and set the large gathering wild with enthusiasm. The big machines fought the pole every lap and the race was a splendid one, the amateur events being closely ridden. The motor-paced race was successful.
